

Research into practice: evidence-based decision-making in international education

One-day Virtual Conference

18th November 2020

At Cambridge Assessment, part of the University of Cambridge, the foundation of all our activity is research. Our participation in projects around the world has confirmed our belief that an investigative approach to education is the only appropriate way to bring meaningful change to education systems.

The current pandemic, the increasingly digital nature of the world, and the gap between the outcomes of education and the needs of society and the professional world make this an absolutely vital time to discuss the future of education through an objective and politically transparent lens.

This conference will bring together researchers and practitioners from around the world to share examples of projects where research has driven changes in an educational programme at a national, regional or local level. We hope that the examples will inspire others to apply similar approaches and thus increase the extent of evidence-based decision-making in education.

The conference will mix presentations with round tables and debates, so that participants and presenters alike will benefit from different perspectives and ideas.

CONFERENCE DETAILS:

VENUE: Virtual (Zoom)

DATE: 18th November 2020

TIME: From 4am to 11pm (CET)

Register here

14
Live
Sessions

19
Hours of Insights

25+
Key
Speakers

4
Round
Tables